The program gives you the possibility to undo or redo your actions, perform basic editing operations (cut, copy, paste), manage paragraphs (indent or unindent), as well as select the writing direction (left to right or right to left). You can perform search operations, embed hyperlinks, footnotes, tables, and images with PNG or JPG file format, attach headings, bulleted or numbered items, and notes, and color the selected text with different preset colors. What's more, you can print or save the written text to TEXT, HTML, TeX, or MD file format, import data from HTML or TeX files, as well as export the information to DOC, RTF, PDF, EPUB, or other file format, provided that you have installed the conversion utility, Pandoc. Other notable characteristics worth mentioning are represented by the possibility to insert or delete rows and columns, switch to a full screen mode for a better focus on your work, set the font size, make the program display the number of characters and words, use hokeys, as well as change the layout of the utility by selecting from different themes. WASHINGTON (CNN) -- One of the nation's largest veterans' hospitals wants to open its doors to all veterans, regardless of where they live, as part of a national campaign to address gaps in health care for the nation's 25 million veterans. U.S. veterans rely on the Department of Veterans Affairs for many of their health needs. The national hospital, founded in 1971 in Manhattan, is the largest veterans hospital in the world, providing care for more than 17,000 veterans from the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan. It is expected to receive more than 100,000 veterans a year. But because the hospital is in New York City, where only 20 percent of veterans live, it is unable to provide care to many of them. About 30 percent of veterans receive care at VA facilities in areas outside of where they live.
