The trial will test the safety, tolerability and efficacy of Rituximab, an immunosuppressive monoclonal antibody, and Uptagrafft, a combination of the anti-CD20 monoclonal antibody Ocrelizumab and valganciclovir. Both of these medications have been FDA-approved for the treatment of refractory MS. The trial is open to approximately 20 participants at the University of Kansas Medical Center, a clinical partner of Uptagrafft and Vertex. Uptagrafft is the first human clinical trial for Ocrelizumab-valganciclovir. It is open to participants with newly diagnosed MS, who are at least 18 years old, and whose relapsing-remitting MS has been active for 12 months or less. "Ocrelizumab-valganciclovir has a proven track record for its safety and tolerability in MS," said David O. Nathan, M.D., Ph.D., professor of neurology at the University of Kansas Medical Center and principal investigator. "We plan to monitor important clinical measures, including relapses, the appearance of new brain lesions on MRI and changes in disability over the course of the study."
